SOME USEFUL VERBS AND VERB PHRASES

1. CAN

TEACHER: The BBC brings you ENGLISH BY RADIO. Listen to Mary and David talking. What are we doing, David? We're teaching English. How are we teaching English? We're teaching English by radio. Can we see the listeners? No, we can't see them. Can they see us? No, they can't see us. We can't see them and they can't see us. But they can hear us. And we can neither hear nor see our listeners. The verb can has no infinitive and no participle. It has no future tense form. Can means he is able to. Able, a-b-l-e. Listen to Mary and David again. Can John's sister cook well? Is John's sister able to cook well? I can't find my pen. I'm unable to find my pen. TEACHER: Those examples showed you how to use be able to instead of can. For present time this is not often necessary. It's better to use can. But now let's see what happens when we want to express future time. Listen to Mary and David again. Can you drive a car, David?

DAVID: Not yet, Mary. I'm learning. I shall be able to drive after a few more lessons. Can you come to the cinema with me on Friday evening, Mary? MARY: Thank you, David, I'm sorry, but I can't go on Friday. I'm going to a dance that evening. My sister broke her arm yesterday. Oh, I am sorry. She won't be able to play tennis this summer, will she? TEACHER: In that conversation, you heard examples showing future time. The word can itself may sometimes express future time, especially the near future. David can himself may sometimes express future time, especially the near future. David said to Mary: Can you come to the cinema with me on Friday evening? And Mary answered: I can't go to the cinema on Friday evening. The other way of showing future time is the use of will or shall, and the word able. David said: I shall be able to drive after a few more lessons. MARY said: My sister won't be able to play tennis this summer, will she? TEACHER: Sometimes can means 'know how to'. Instead of 'Do you speak French?' we might say: Can you speak French? Listen to an example of this meaning, future time. DAVID: Can you speak French, Mary? MARY: Yes, I can speak French. I'm learning Spanish. Next year I shall be able to speak Spanish too. TEACHER: Mary can speak French now - present time. Mary will be able to speak Spanish next year. What do we do for past time? There is a past tense form - could, c-o-u-l-d, could, and that's the subject of our next lesson.
